

ARTEVISIONE IS A MULTI-FACETED PROJECT CONCEIVED BY CAREOF AND DEVELOPED WITH THE SUPPORT OF SKY ARTE THAT AIMS TO PROMOTE AND SUPPORT THE RESEARCH AND THE PRODUCTION PROCESSES AROUND THE MOVING IMAGES.

Through the launching of a national open call, It offers to young and mid-career artists the chance to get involved into a whole process of education and production held by well known curators, artists and cinema producers from around the world.

ArteVisione started in 2013 with a pilot edition that included three artists and one collective chosen by invitation, to produce a video work distributed through the Sky Arte channel and then promoted through cinema and visual art filed. The invitation was addressed to the artist Yuri Ancarani (Sansiro, 2014); Francesco Bertocco (Family Show, 2014); Giuseppe Fanizza (Spectaculum, 2014) and Zimmerfrei (Intervallo, 2014).

Following its original mission, in 2015 ArteVisione launched a national open call that selected the artist Luca Trevisani for the realization of Cerchio, a mid-length movie that pays a tribute to the modernist architecture of Villa Girasole (VE) and its unconventional relationship and functioning with the sun.

Starting from 2016 ArteVisione enlarged its vision including an educational format under the name of ArteVisione Lab that allows since then a short list of artists to take part to a rich moment of exchange and critical session with several professionals and one visiting professor from art and cinema field in order to discuss collectively the original scripts and proposals before they can be evaluated by an international jury. Under the guidance of the artist Adrian Paci in the role of visiting professor Riccardo Giacconi was supported by the grant by producing Lo Scherzo, a video portrait of the Italian singer-songwriter Alberto Camerini.

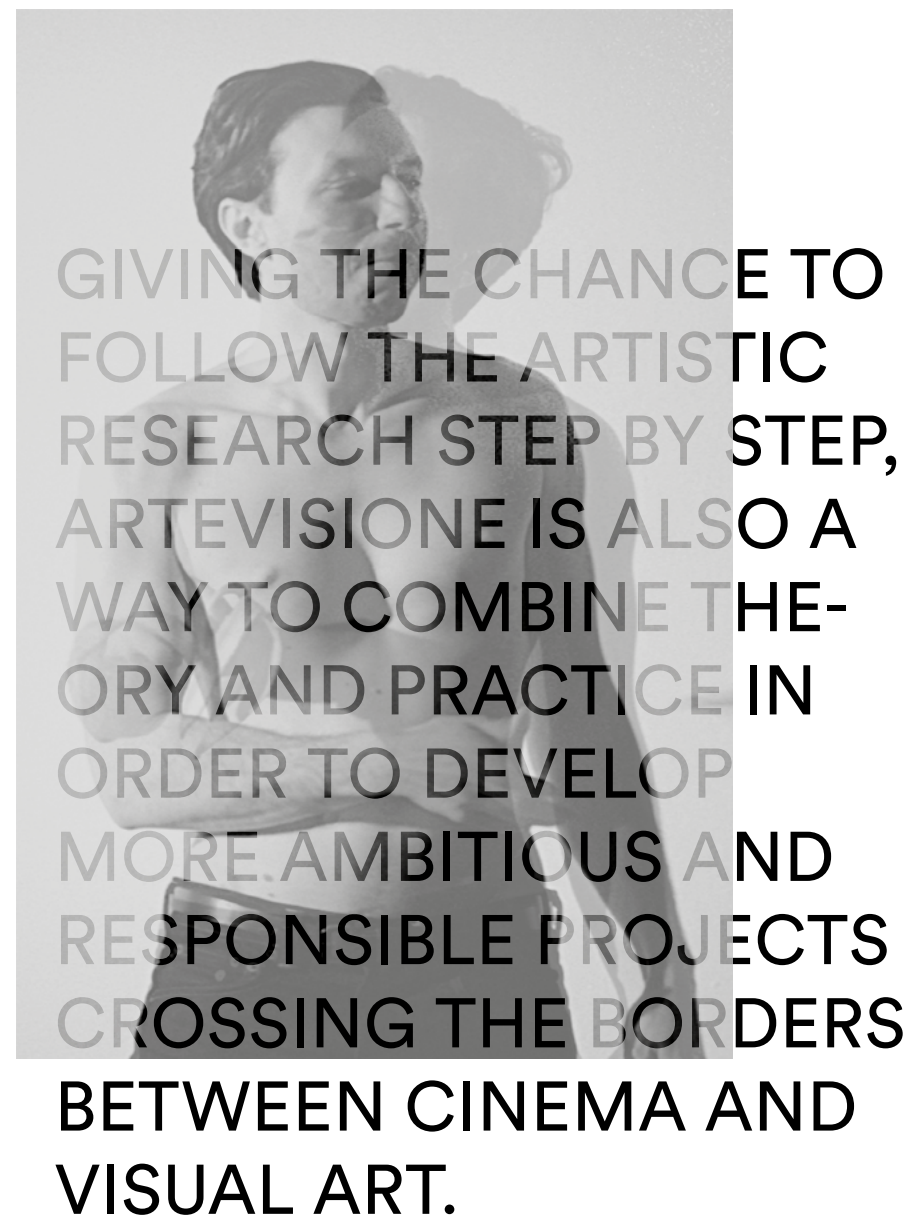

The following edition of 2017 has invited the artist Omer Fast as visiting professor and produced Mum, I'm sorry by the young artist Martina Melilli dealing with the controversial issue of migrants in the Mediterranean Sea. An attempt to restore an identity and redefine geographical and cultural distances.

In its fifth edition, ArteVisione Lab brought professionals from different fields such as Marco Alessi (producer and founder of Dugong Films, Rome); Andrea Lissoni (Senior Curator Tate Modern, London); Eva Sangiorgi (Artistic Director Viennale, Wien) and the artist Jordi Colomer as visiting professor. Giulio Squillacciotti won the 2018 edition with What has left since we left, a paradoxical journey through the last days of Europe, seen through the eyes (and voice) of an interpreter called to translate the speeches of the representatives of the last three European countries left in the EU.

The coming edition brings Barbara Wagner and Benjamin de Burca as visiting professors and develops specific 1:1 sessions with professionals such as Marco Alessi, Eva Sangiorgi and Martina Angelotti and Marta Bianchi from Careof's team. The invited guests aim at provide the seven artists involved with the chance to discuss, assess and even elaborate upon their initial idea on the base of critical sessions, public discussions and individual presentations during the five days of workshop placed at Careof. An international jury will select the individual proposal by the beginning of February.

ArteVisione can represent a fundamental step into the artist's career, inscribing itself as a unique opportunity into the complex world of video production and distribution.

ECHOIC MEMORIES

A girl from the periphery of Tirana travels every day to work in an Italian call centre in the city capital. One day she receives a telephone call from a cartographer working at the Geographic Military Institute in Florence, where 13.000 glass plates of aerial photographs of Albania - made during the Italian occupation of the country between 1928 and 1942 - are kept.

The two start a conversation where the girl unveils a new grammar and terminology of the contemporary map that connects Italy with Albania, while the cartographer tries to draw it only through the words and sounds that he perceives from her. Slowly we start to discover the grammar of an echoic memory, the register of a sensorial memory specific to the auditory information for a short period of time, until a new sound arrives.

THE LAST SUFI

The last Sufi is a docu-fiction portrait of Ali Khemais - the image of a contemporary prophet from Tunisia who roams the streets of Bolzano, Alto Adige. Anti-system, secular and feverishly Gramscian - Khemais professes the inconsistencies of capitalism and the western world, where everyone is "used and owned by the hegemonic powers at play", searching for discussions in conferences and seminars and public forums. The life of Khemais reveals a clash between the West and the East, a misunderstood cultural variable that separates the world of the oral culture from the written. As an heir to the oral culture of the Arabic world, Khemais longs for the fluidity of the discussion - for an ongoing argumentation that raises new questions and few answers.

The last Sufi aims to mystify the existence of the holy among us and the inconsistencies between our values and our practices as a society. Between fiction and truth, it questions the possibility of the existence of prophets among us, in a society not able anymore to recognize them. Khemais might be the prophet we need - but he is also the prophet we will never accept. What can a wise man preach, when no one wants to listen?

MA*I WATA

Inside a LGBT nightclub in Havana, the shows and dances coexist illicitly with the phenomenon of prostitution, which is prohibited in Cuba. It is a short film on the desire and speculation (or spectacularization) of the body, full of symbolisms. Filming illegally inside the place, I narrate the story of Franco, a young dancer who earns his living by selling himself to the tourists, and the restricted world that surrounds him (for now I lived with the protagonist for a week in Havana).

The documentary is inserted as the third chapter of my ongoing research regarding the utilisation of the human body as a marketplace, on which I have made two other documentaries: Diamonds (sale of the postmortem body) and Rest in pieces (sale of the postmortem body and body parts - in progress). It is a hybrid documentary in which I film such daily activities of the hidden trade of one's body inside the club, praising sexual desire through sensual dances and spectacles, and I insert images related to the history of the cult of the Goddess Mami W*ta (aquatic goddess) between the interstices of the shows, from which my research to develop this work began.

CORINNE MAZZOLI

BIOGRAPHY

My research is very often focused on the analysis of the female body closely related to its image on social networks, it is a way to talk about invisibility and hypervisibility.

BUILDING MASS MASS AND MORE MASS #FEMININITYCHALLENGE

What does it mean “to be more feminine”? Playing on stereotypes and parodies, can we enhance femininity in female bodybuilding through Drag Queen posing? According to heteronormative binary stereotypes, feminine competitive bodybuilders have been criticized for not being feminine enough and for the exaggeration of their muscular mass that makes them too masculine.

Building Mass Mass and more Mass #femininitychallenge film will act as a tool to familiarize and defamiliarize with body stereotypes that manipulate our imaginaries, especially those linked to a heteronormative standardization of the body, where muscles are an exclusive biological male attribute and femininity is an inborn female one.

The actors of the film will be a contemporary artist (myself), a female bodybuilder and a Drag Queen, together they will work and create a Routine to be performed on a stage and filmed. All the ideas revolving around the female body in the film will be constructed and deconstructed, imitated and parodied to challenge the so called “normalcy” and critically rethink the concept of “femininity” through the agencies of contemporary art, adopting competitive bodybuilding and Drag Queen aesthetics.

FUCINO BASIN

The Fucino lake was the third lake in Italy for its size and it had been under reclamation since Roman times. However, it was only in 1875 that the final draining of the lagoon occurred. The disappearance of the lake caused not only a massive environmental transformation, but also deep economic and social changes that altered the ancient region ever since. Although Christianity has shaped the spiritual connotation of the territory, pagan customs and myths are still ascribed to these lands: a syncretism historically rooted that is lively reconfigured in the present.

Nowadays, the basin that looked as a little world shielded by the cluster of its mountains interacts with the sky with the help of astronomical mirrors. The "Telespazio", operative since 1963, is currently recognised as the first and most important teleport in the world for civil uses.

The constant silent communication between the white parabolas and the satellites in the cosmos clashes with human attempts of reaching the unknown through the performativity of the pagan rituals. The aim of this project is to put at dialogue these two apparently distant realities that coexist in this magical and yet disturbing territory.

THE CUTE AND THE USEFUL

The Cute and the useful is an expression referring to those animals who are likely to survive the current mass extinction process: those toward which we feel empathy on the one hand and those who are valuable in terms of their contribution to human economy.

This perfectly fits a widespread human attitude towards nature, a concept often declared dead but still influencing our way of looking at the world. Despite the massive and dramatic environmental catastrophes proving that our interference with the biosphere processes has disrupted life's equilibrium, it is hard to accept that nature has ended. Or better, that it has never existed. We still grow up with cultural products attesting that there is a place, a virgin land somewhere on Earth, where animals roam freely.

Through a combination of documentary and fiction, our project describes the South African wildlife industry, an economy built on a simple logic: in order to preserve the environment and its endangered species, those animals must have a value. Once they are turned into economic assets, the private and public sectors will invest in their conservation. Through the many contradictions and ethical questions that the system poses, we want to address a series of biases and colonial heritages that still influence our understanding of the world.

BEHIND THE HORIZON

The film is set in the near future in which the Earth for unknown reasons turns flat. Our main narrator is a researcher who tries to understand this impossible geophysical change. It seems that since the flattening we've started to lose the capacity of scientific interpretation. Even the numbers and languages have become more and more simple. The different chapters of the film constantly test our ability to observe and interpret.

We are immersed in watching what happens on the screen by continuously putting in discussion the physicality, the scale and the nature of the objects. The materials behave as if physical laws would no longer exist. The only place of resistance is the Border of the Earth which is a completely new territory created with the terrestrial flattening. Behind the Horizon constantly plays with the viewer's vision proposing possibilities, perplexities, alternatives and speculations. After all it's us who have created the flat Earth.

FABRIZIO VATIERI

BIOGRAPHY

Fabrizio Vatiéri works as an artist and researcher, mainly with photography and performance-art. His artistic research is based on the relationship between representation and identity of places, on the relationship between man and space and on the dialectic between artistic research and the working dimension of the artist itself, investigating the meaning of work as a human performance and the its relationship with the poetic and spiritual dimension of the individual.

He is a member of Op-Fot, a Milan-based independent photography and video agency, specialized in art, design and architecture.

LA SCOPERTA

A fiction film that narrates the effects produced by the real estate market in the framework of the turistification processes of the cities, using the narrative expedient of the theatrical pièce. The project stems from the overlap of two researches that I have conducted in parallel in recent years, regarding the concept of representation.

The first level consists of the relationship between photography and the real estate market. The second starts from a research on tourism in the Mediterranean cities, then with a specific focus on the city of Naples, the new exotic destination for mass tourism. The film is set on the top floor of one of the skyscrapers of the business district of Naples, in the meeting room of an important Corporation of the international real estate sector. The CEO of the Corporation together with his Neapolitan delegation, holds a meeting in which he shows the increasing data of the real estate dynamics in Naples. After that the managing director presents the new product of the Corporation: Una città ancora tutta da scoprire (A city yet to be discovered). The Corporation invited one of the greatest international directors to the meeting, to make the movie that will change the history of the real estate market: La Scoperta (The Discovery).
